

Arty is a new student attending the University of British Columbia Vancouver. And since campus is right outside of one of Canada's largest cities, he's having some trouble finding his way around.

He tried his best getting to class, but ended up at Taco Bell instead...

He was very late for class that day

The next day, he tried to get to his class again, but got lost and ended up at Shoney's

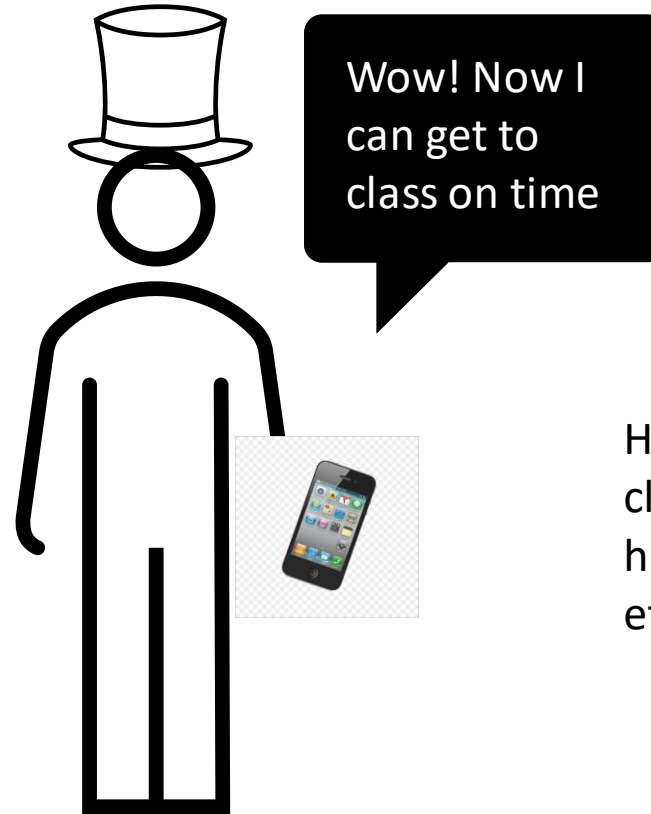

Arty had an existential crisis. He was, again, very late for class that day

Arty was very sad.
He wanted a way to easily
find his classes so he wouldn't be late anymore.
Maybe some sort of mobile application that gave him GPS directions to class buildings,
classrooms, and campus
amenities.

If only there was a way... :(

Arty downloaded classFinder! A tool to help students find their way around campus and campus buildings. Enter any building address and room number and classFinder will direct you to it!

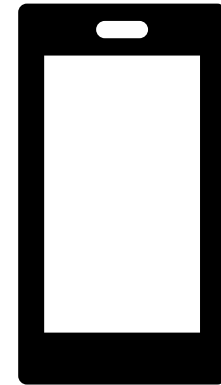

He uses the classroomFinder feature to help him find the most efficient way to his class.

With classFinder, Arty knows how to get to class, but now he needs to pick his mode of transportation. Lucky for him, classFinder will give Arty the most convenient mode of transportation based on topographical and GPS data.

How should I ride to class???

Take the bus,
Arthur.

With classFinder, Arty is significantly less depressed.

Thank God I
can finally get to class on time now!

Abandon
religion, Arthur.
